

Employee Reimbursement Policy

Enterprise Knowledge Assistant — Sample Knowledge Base

1. Purpose

This policy explains how employees can claim reimbursement for reasonable and approved business expenses incurred while performing company work.

2. Eligibility

Employees may claim eligible business expenses when the expense was necessary for an approved business activity and was incurred in accordance with company procedures.

3. Prior Approval

Employees should obtain manager approval before making significant or unusual business expenses. Expenses without required approval may be rejected.

4. Eligible Expenses

Eligible expenses may include approved business travel, transportation, accommodation, meals during business travel, conference fees, and other expenses specifically authorized by the company.

5. Transportation

Reasonable transportation expenses for approved business activities may be reimbursed. Employees should use cost-effective transportation options unless business requirements justify an alternative.

6. Air Travel

Air travel for business purposes should normally be booked through the company's approved travel process. Employees should select reasonable fares and comply with applicable travel-class rules.

7. Accommodation

Employees may claim reasonable accommodation expenses for approved business travel. The accommodation should normally meet the company's approved spending limits.

8. Meals

Reasonable meal expenses incurred during eligible business travel may be reimbursed. Personal meals outside the approved travel period are not normally reimbursable.

9. Business Meetings

Meals or refreshments for external business meetings may be reimbursed when they are reasonable, business-related, and approved according to company procedures.

10. Mileage and Personal Vehicles

Employees who use an approved personal vehicle for business travel may claim mileage where the company provides a mileage reimbursement rate. Commuting between home and the normal workplace is not considered business travel.

11. Receipts

Employees must provide original receipts or valid digital receipts for reimbursable expenses unless the company has approved an exception for a specific expense category.

12. Missing Receipts

If a receipt is unavailable, the employee should provide an explanation and any available supporting evidence. Reimbursement may be subject to finance approval.

13. Submission Deadline

Expense claims should normally be submitted within 30 days of the expense date. Older claims may require additional approval or may be rejected.

14. Expense Report

Each expense report should include the expense date, amount, currency, business purpose, category, and appropriate supporting documentation.

15. Currency Conversion

Expenses incurred in a foreign currency should be converted using the approved company exchange-rate method. Employees may be asked to provide transaction records when required.

16. Non-Reimbursable Expenses

Personal entertainment, fines or penalties, unauthorized upgrades, personal purchases, and expenses unrelated to company business are generally not reimbursable.

17. Corporate Cards

Employees issued a company payment card must use it only for authorized business expenses and must submit supporting documentation according to finance procedures.

18. Approval Workflow

Expense claims are reviewed by the employee's manager and, where required, the finance team. Claims may be returned for clarification or additional documentation.

19. Fraudulent Claims

Submitting false, altered, duplicated, or intentionally misleading expense claims is prohibited and may result in disciplinary action.

20. Policy Exceptions

Exceptions to this policy require prior approval from the appropriate authorized person. An exception for one expense does not automatically create a general exception.

21. Record Keeping

Employees should retain relevant receipts and supporting documents until the claim has been processed and according to any applicable company record-retention requirements.

22. Policy Review

The company may update reimbursement limits, eligible categories, approval requirements, and procedures when business or regulatory requirements change.
